Now that Global Soccer Mania is behind us...

It was with a high level of enthusiasm that Seattle became a hub for global soccer mania. Ultimately we want to say and cheer "Go Spain" but we also want to recognize the Unity Museum as having been part of the planning activities within the University District. It was with great joy that we just received a letter of recognition for this neighborhood activity.

"Unboxing" a Letter of Recognition

Ultimately we enjoyed 401,500 spectators. All games were 100% sold-out and were averaging about 66,917 spectators per match. The official FanFest attracted more than 750,000 visitors between June 15 & June 27. Combined participation added up to more than 1.5 million visits.

It Sure Is Nice to Have Friends

Take for instance July 29. Wow what a day. When the Director of the museum's doorbell rang at 8 o'clock in the morning, thank goodness she was up and ready for company when our museum friend named Karin arrived on our doorstep with a huge bouquet of flowers in her arm. I truly felt spoiled and appreciated and soon arrived at the museum. And then much to our surprise, two visitors arrived also with flowers in their hand to show how much they appreciated our friendship. With coffee and great conversation, what a morning.

Weekly Object: 'Soccer Fans'

Many ancient civilizations played games such as soccer starting with ancient China as early as the 2nd century BCE. Ancient Greece and Rome followed, and eventually Japan and Meso-America. The modern version emerged and developed in England in 1848, and by 1863 the first Football association was formed.
